ETHNOGRAPHIES OF WORK

Be on the lookout for an exciting approach to career exploration. Adapted from Guttman Community College, Ethnographies of Work (EoW) integrated courses at BHCC invite students to study work as a set of interconnected cultural systems. In EoW integrated courses, students investigate workplace sites using ethnographic methods such as observation, interview, mapping, and document analysis. As ethnographers, students have the opportunity to deeply investigate a range of workplace norms, values, social hierarchies, and behavioral expectations. Through this lens, students further explore links between self, theory, and work. Students are encouraged to then explore links between broader concepts of work life, such as disruption, stereotyping, uncertainty, work myths, and diversity. Critical examination of personal, cultural, social, structural, and economic aspects of the work experience will support students as they contemplate their own career journeys.

This spring 2021 semester, EoW will be included in courses such as Sociology, Computer Science, Literature, Early Childhood Education, Criminal Justice, and Allied Health.
