WESTFIELD STATE U | Patrick administration grills Westfield State University trustees about President Dobelle - Boston Globe

09/20/2013 - The state's top higher education official publicly scolded trustees of Westfield State University Friday for failing to rein in controversial president Evan Dobelle despite his "clear and consistent pattern of charging personal expenses in large amounts to a university credit card in clear violation of institutional policy and state ethics laws." Higher Education Commissioner Richard M. Freeland said "one of the worst moments" in his 40-year education career came in August when he read the Globe's account of Dobelle's lavish spending on travel to Asia and other destinations and how he ran up more than $200,000 in expenses on a single university-related credit card.

WESTFIELD STATE U | Westfield State president, trustees grilled on spending - Lowell Sun Online

09/21/2013 - Westfield State University President Evan Dobelle said he had no intention of leaving his job even as top state education officials voiced dismay Friday over reports he spent lavishly while traveling in school business and used university credit cards for personal expenses. "I think everything we've spent was strategically planned," Dobelle told reporters before a closed-door meeting with Richard Freeland, the state's commissioner of higher education, and other officials. Dobelle, who has asserted that the spending resulted in a significant "return on investment" for the public university in western Massachusetts, said he is proud of his accomplishments as president.

WESTFIELD STATE U | Westfield State President, Board Grilled On Spending - WBUR

09/20/2013 - Westfield State University president Evan Dobelle says he has no plans to step down from his job amid reports of lavish spending and his use of school credit cards for personal expenses. Dobelle told reporters prior to a meeting with state officials on Friday that all of his spending was "strategically planned" and that he was proud of his accomplishments as president. Earlier in the day, the state Board of Higher Education questioned university trustees about their knowledge of the questionable expenses detailed in an accountant's report and in a letter from the state inspector general.

WESTFIELD STATE U | Dubious claims about a fund-raising trip create credibility problem for Westfield State's Dobelle - Boston Globe

09/20/2013 - Westfield State University president Evan Dobelle portrayed his fund-raising trip to San Francisco in May as a rousing success, leaving the impression with trustees that he hobnobbed with movers and shakers as he sought $500,000 in grants for the university. For a school fund-raising program nearly broke after years of Dobelle's costly initiatives, it was welcome news. But the original draft of Dobelle's report, written by the staffer who accompanied him, painted a less glamorous picture: The staff member — not Dobelle — went from one charitable foundation to the next, dropping off information packets at the front desk without ever meeting top officials, let alone asking them for money.

WESTFIELD STATE U | Inspector General urges Westfield State to rein in President Dobelle's spending - Boston Globe

09/20/2013 - Inspector General Glenn A. Cunha has found that Westfield State University president Evan Dobelle violated school policy by using credit cards for personal expenses, and spent money earmarked for programs and scholarships "indiscriminately with little or no consideration" for its intended purpose. In a two-page letter sent Thursday, the day before Dobbelle and the trustees are scheduled to meet with state education officials, Cunha also urged the school's trustees to "move quickly" to scrutinize Dobbelle's spending and his claims that his expenditures have brought the school a "return on investment" worth millions of dollars. The inspector general warned that he "has concerns about broader allegations of misconduct in connection with spending at both" Westfield State University and the foundation that does the university's fund-raising.

09/20/2013 - Problems continue for Westfield State University President Evan Dobbelle who's accused of spending taxpayers money for his own personal expenses. A hearing Friday in Boston and an investigation completed by the Inspector General all came to the same conclusion that Dobbelle broke school policy. From Westfield to Boston both taxpayers and lawmakers are trying to make sense of WSU President Evan Dobbelle's controversial spending habits. "Misuse of funds is misuse of funds. Some people take it for granted that they have that luxury and they abuse it. Whether he did or not, I'm not sure," said Westfield's John Wellspeak.

09/20/2013 - (Audio) Westfield State Trustees were grilled on Friday by state education officials on university president Evan Dobbelle's lavish spending. Outside auditors found Dobbelle used school credit cards and donor money for excessive travel costs- including $500 a night hotel rooms and dinner parties for $1,500. Dobbelle has acknowledged he made mistakes, but he said his spending was an investment that brought the school millions of dollars in support. At the meeting, state officials asked university trustees if they were satisfied with that explanation.

09/20/2013 - The state commissioner of higher education on Friday lashed out at Westfield State University president Evan Dobbelle, saying the president clearly violated state ethics laws and university policies through his questionable use of school credit cards for personal spending and overseas business travel including $500 hotel rooms, $350 lunches and dinners costing more than $1,500. ...Dobbelle did not attend the meeting with trustees but then met separately and privately for more than two hours with Freeland, Matthew Malone, the state's education secretary, and Charles F. Desmond, chairman of the state Board of Higher Education. "These are very big numbers," Freeland said after the two-hour meeting with trustees. "I find them hard to justify under any circumstances using public money and even harder to justify when you see the lack of return."

09/16/2013 - Leonardo da Vinci, if he knew what was going on with arts and science, he'd be disappointed," said Brett Sylvia, a sculpting student at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth. Sylvia was referring to the fact that usually, on college campuses, the arts and sciences exist as separate disciplines. And, of course, da Vinci was famously both a scientist and an artist. But in today's business world, engineers and artists collaborate on projects. So why should it be that on college campuses, that engineering and art students don't collaborate? The new IDEASstudio — Innovation, Design, Engineering and Art — at UMass Dartmouth hopes to address that, fostering collaboration among engineering and art students. It's located in the textiles building near the Charlton College of Business and the Carney Library.

HIGHER ED TRENDS | Column: By Rep. Tom Sannicandro: Making college more affordable - MetroWest Daily News

09/15/2013 - This month President Obama announced a plan to tackle the rising cost of higher education. The plan calls for implementing a grading system for colleges to determine which offer the best value to students. One metric being used in the grading system is graduation rates. Graduation rates are essential to value because attaining a degree in the 21st century creates a pathway to economic prosperity. Like most students I went to college to climb the economic ladder. I was the first generation in my family to attend college. When I attended college, I saw new doors open up to me that were not available to my parents. Thirty years later, college is still one of the best investments a family can make in their child's economic success. But too many families make financial sacrifices only to have their child attend some college without achieving graduation and falling short of making it into the middle class.

K-12 TRENDS | New PARCC exams to focus on student readiness, may replace MCAS - Berkshire Eagle Online

09/21/2013 - Standardized test scores and progress reports for Massachusetts public schools and districts were released on Friday, perhaps for the last time in the way that school systems have come to know it. In spring 2014, a new testing system will be piloted in Massachusetts in addition to Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System exams. While these numbers from the spring MCAS exams will be crunched over the next several months to see what areas students succeeded and struggled, the scores also tell another story about how the state's overall assessment system has to change. According to The Associated Press, students' scores on exams from the latest MCAS continue to improve, yet many graduates are still not fully prepared for the academic rigors of college. ...In recent years, officials have been rethinking ways to put students on track for careers and college preparedness.

K-12 TRENDS | MCAS results improve, but many grads unprepared - CapeCodOnline.com

09/19/2013 - Gov. Deval Patrick's administration touted a record- high performance on the exams taken by 10th-graders last spring. The percentages of students scoring proficient or higher on the tests were 91 percent for the English portion, 80 percent for math and 71 percent for science. A passing score on MCAS, short for Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, is required for students to receive their high school diplomas. The state said 88 percent of students met the minimum requirements on their first try this year, up from 86 percent a year ago. Despite that trend, the state's education commissioner, Mitchell Chester, noted that 40 percent of Massachusetts public high school graduates who enroll in the state's public colleges and universities are placed in non-credit, developmental programs to help them handle the tougher coursework.
